Un [un], negative part. used as prefix (in compounds with subst.'s, adj.'s, adv.'s and p.p.'s, =) un-, in-, im-, dis-, ir-, not, non-. The principal meanings of un- are: 1. absolute negation, e.g. Unmöglich, unmöglich; 2. a bad sort of, e.g. Unmensch, Unart; 3. excessive amount, e.g. Unmenge, Unsumme. Only the most important of the numberless compounds with un- can be given here. The meaning of others will be obvious when un-, in-, or not are prefixed to the equivalent of the second part of the compound. If the second word is a participle, see the verb to which it belongs. In case it is a derivative in -bar, -lich or -sam look out the verb from which it is derived. The accentuation of the compounds with un- is in some cases doubtful; the usual one has been indicated. As a rule it may be noted that in the case of compounds with nouns (Unfinn) and adjectives (unfrei) the principal accent is on the prefix un-, especially if the word without un- is of frequent occurrence. In other cases it is possible to place the accent so as to emphasize either the note or the second part of the compound. Note the glottal stop in compounds with un- the second part of which begins with a vowel, e.g. unabhängig.

LIST OF GERMAN IRREGULAR VERBS

INCLUDING ALL VERBS OF THE STRONG AND ANOMALOUS CONJUGATION AS WELL AS THOSE OF THE WEAK WHICH ARE CONJUGATED IN ANY WAY IRREGULARLY

§ In everyday language the forms of the imperfect subjunctive are more or less substituted by the first conditional; e.g. er sagte mir, er würde baden instead of er biete.

¶ Plural forms of the imperative correspond in form to the 3rd person present indicative unless otherwise stated.

|| The past participle of the auxiliary verbs of mood (dürfen, mögen, müssen, wollen, &c.) is changed into the infinitive in the past compound tenses when it is immediately preceded by an infinitive; this is also the case with lassen used as an auxiliary, as well as with the verbs heißen, helfen, hören, lehren, lernen, sehen.

† = to be avoided.
* = obsolete or poetical.
‡ = dialectic.

Forms not enclosed in parentheses are of fairly equal value. Forms enclosed in parentheses are less common or not so good.

For compounds with be-, ent-, er-, ge-, miß-, ver-, voll-, zer-, and other prefixes see the simple verbs where not otherwise given.
